I understand that your Apple Pencil (2nd generation) doesn't recharge when connected to your iPad Pro. You're in the right place for a resolution. Let's start by making sure that Bluetooth is enabled on your iPad, and that the Apple Pencil is attached to the center of the right side of your iPad (towards the USB-C connector). If there's no indication that the Apple Pencil is in charge, restart the iPad: Restart your iPhone, iPad or iPod touch - Apple Support For more information on how to use and charge your Apple Pencil, check out the following resource: Use Apple Pencil with your iPad or iPad Pro - Apple Support Cheers! I've found that sometimes it won't charge if it's pointed at the USB-C connector, even if it's magnetically connected. I haven't found a specific statement that says the pencil tip should point to the volume buttons, but it seems that's the case. I also note that in all the marketing photos I've seen, this is the orientation used. I had it loaded overnight using an ipad, but pencil still won't load. Strangely when I managed to pair the pencil with the pro with the inserted pencil, the load state jumps from 3% to 100% in a few minutes, but when you remove the pencil, the pairing disconnects. When plugged in again, it shows 3% again. I don't know if this is a hardware or software issue, but when sent to an Apple Store they can't understand and since it was out warranty had little choice but to buy a new pencil. A warning for all users not to leave it unloaded for a long time or well pencil will never load again. August 12, 2017 10:22 PM November 7, 2017 23:13 PM in response to Ben64smith In response to Ben64smith Since I got my iPad Pro and Pencil, I've looked and gone, but it's as if no one seems to know that rechargeable batteries don't last forever. Generally rechargeable batteries as in mobile phones last 2 years, then begin to be able to hold less and less of a charge. No one on these forums will even mention the possibility that the user may be at this point. Even users who went to the store say that the apple geniuses couldn't understand it and it was out of warranty, so it's a whodunnit mystery! I guess apple will dress it up the same way the subject was handled with iPods. Class action. Depending on where you come from, they are protected by many laws. Years ago because of this same problem, youtuber Casey Neistat and brother, made an HBO doc film themselves as they finally discovered that they bought a product that after 2 years can no longer hold a charge and is now useless. It took a lot of contacts before they got the truth. Thats when apple (who says they were already workingin on this) worked to create the exchange program where you pay like $100 and sends in the phone or iPod. The last time I found out they had contracted this service to another company. As far as I know, nothing exists for the pencil and youtuber techs who dissected it, say it did in a way that is almost impossible to open and replace the battery without damaging it. I've replaced my iPhone battery, but I was hoping that eventually a solution would come at a time when mine no longer holds a charge. The battery of the Apple Pencil was completely drained and it did not charge the iPad. The solution that worked for me is:1. Go to Bluetooth settings and remove Apple Pencil from the list of paired devices.2 Plug in Apple iPad.3. Wait for the message that asks you if you want to yo paer the pencil and pair two devices.4 wait 10 - 15 minutes for the Apple Pencil to charge Jul 5, 2017 2:31 AM Sep 11, 2017 10:30 AM in response to Hotklm In response to Hotklm I have one that does exactly the same, apple offers off warranty repairs?
